Re: Controller's Comments on Draft Proposed Decision

Notification of Truancy, 07-904133-I-05 and 10-904133-I-07
Education Code Section 48260.5
Statutes 1983, Chapter 498
Fiscal Years 1999-2000 through 2001-02
San Juan Unified School District, Claimant

Dear Ms. Halsey and Mr. Petersen:

This letter constitutes this office's response to the Draft Proposed Decision (DPD) in this matter. Although we agree with the conclusion that the audit was conducted in a timely manner, we disagree with the conclusion that the notification sent upon the third absence is reimbursable. Such a conclusion is contrary to the clear language in the relevant parameters and guidelines, and the mandatory language of AB 1698 (Stats. 2007, Ch. 69). It also violates the standard process for the determination of a mandate and the amendment of parameters and guidelines. For these reasons we oppose the reinstatement of the costs associated with the notification sent upon the third absence.

The primary problem with the conclusion that the third notification is reimbursable is that this result is contrary to the plain language of AB 1698. In part that bill provides that:

[T]he Commission on State Mandates shall amend the parameters and guidelines regarding the notification of truancy ... and modify the definition of a truant ... [c]hanges made by the commission to the parameters and guidelines shall be deemed effective on July 1, 2006.

The bill unambiguously provides that changes to the definition of a truant, for the purposes of the parameters and guidelines, will not become effective until July 1, 2006. Despite this clear language the DPD proceeds to retroactively amend the definition of truant to some date prior to the fiscal years audited, presumably 1995. Had the legislature desired to make the changes retroactive to 1995, they could have easily done so, but they chose not to. The DPD does not set forth any reasons for ignoring the plain language of AB 1698. In doing so it renders portions of AB 1698 surplusage, a result that is to be disfavored.¹ One possible reason is that staff believes that AB 1698 compels a result that is inconsistent with the provisions of Article XIII B, § 6. However, an administrative agency has no power to disregard a statute that they believe is unconstitutional². Since AB 1698 clearly provides that the old definition of truant is applicable until July 1, 2006, the Commission should uphold the finding of the auditors with respect to the notification upon the third absence.

The conclusion in the DPD is also contrary to the explicit language of the parameters and guidelines. The parameters and guidelines provide that “[a] truancy occurs when a student is absent from school without valid excuse more than three (3) days”.³ The DPD dismissively notes that the cited language is in the “summary,” but fails to provide any legal authority for treating it differently than other portions of the parameters and guidelines. If the summary is of no import, then the Legislature’s direction to amend it would be without any practical effect, and we cannot presume that the Legislature engages in idle acts.⁴ The DPD also goes to great lengths to label the definition of truant as “definitional” as opposed to the identified reimbursable activities, which it labels as “mandatory”. Again though, the DPD fails to cite any legal or logical authority for treating the two types of language differently. Although they contain different provisions, Education Code⁵ sections 48260 and 48260.5 are inextricably linked, without the existence of Section 48260, Section 48260.5 has no force or effect. Although not explicitly stated, the DPD essentially recommends that the Commission approve a sua sponte, retroactive amendment of the parameters and guidelines, without providing any legal authority for such an action. Not only is there no legal authority for such an amendment, but it would also be contrary to the express language of AB 1698, as noted above.

The final problem with the DPD’s approach is that it ignores the basic concepts and procedures of the mandate process. Although a statute, or executive order or regulation, creates a mandate, it is the test claim process that creates reimbursability. The legislature, in passing Government Code sections 17500 et seq., chose to place the burden on local governmental entities to establish reimbursability. Because of this process there may often be discrepancies between what a local is legally obligated to do, and what they are reimbursed for doing. The DPD asserts, without any real analysis, that the 1994 amendment to Section 48260 [S.B. 1728 (Stats. 1994, Ch. 1023)] does not constitute a mandate as it does not require a new program or higher level of service. However, the DPD fails to state the rules for determining if it is a new program or higher level of service, and never applies the facts to those rules. In the Statement of Decision for the Domestic Violence Background Checks program (dated July 26, 2007), at pages 8-9, the Commission stated that:

To determine if the program is new or imposes a higher level of service, the test claim legislation must be compared with the legal requirements in effect immediately before the enactment of the test claim legislation⁶. A “higher level of service” occurs when the new “requirements were intended to provide an enhanced service to the public.”⁷ Finally, the newly required activity or increased level of service must impose costs mandated by the state.⁸

Applying these rules we can clearly see that the 1994 amendment to Section 48260 created a mandate, as it imposed a higher level of service upon school districts. Before the amendment the districts only had to send the truancy notification if a pupil had four absences, but after the amendment the district had to send the notification upon the third absence. The new requirements were clearly intended to provide an enhanced service to the public as it provided for earlier notice to parents of the attendance issues of their child, allowing them to intervene earlier, and hopefully reduce the potential for future attendance problems. The increased costs are at the core of this IRC. Applying the Commission’s own rules we see that the 1994 amendment to Section 48260 created a state mandate, and the only way for the claimant’s to receive reimbursement therefore, would have been for them to file a test claim, which no school district ever did. Based on the above factors the Controller’s Office believes that the Commission should find that the 1993 version of the parameters and guidelines applies, and therefore the reductions made were proper and in accordance with law.

Sincerely,

SHAWN D. SILVA
Senior Staff Counsel
